

Vacancy for Environmental Monitoring Trainee

An enthusiastic, hardworking individual is required to join the Environmental Department monitoring team to be trained and given experience in this field. We anticipate that this person will have studied technical or science based subjects to A-Level and be looking for further development within a working environment.

The position will involve stack emission and workplace monitoring at industrial sites in all parts of the UK. Support activities include both laboratory and office duties. These include preparation and maintenance of sampling equipment, the production of reports and quotations, use of computer spreadsheets, word processing and quality assurance activities.

The applicant should be available to travel within the UK, and some of the work will involve overnight stays. Due to the nature of the work, irregular hours are often required. A clean driving licence will be an advantage.

Applicants should send their CV to Jon Donohoe
